

Hope in This Life

The women live in a small thatch home in Thailand. Together they suffer through the life sentence of AIDS. The women are also listeners to a radio program called "Hope in This Life." Jai, who has endured AIDS for more than ten years, commented "I like listening to the program because it gives me encouragement." Som, another of the women said, "It gives me value and I don't want to kill myself anymore."

Jai, Som and two other AIDS victims live apart from their families because of their illness. The local Nazarene church who broadcasts "Hope in This Life" is helping meet their needs. The women are finding friendship and a place to belong in God's everlasting family. World Mission Broadcast programs, like "Hope in This Life", transmit God's message of HOPE to the ends of the earth and even into small thatch homes in Thailand... and lives are blessed.
